DAN SMOOT

JUDGE THEM BY THEIR RECORDS

The present (88th) Congress began in January, 1963, and must end by early January, 1965. During the first session of the present Congress (1963), I tabulated 79 roll call votes: 46 in the Senate, 33 in the House. During the first nine months of the second session (January through September, 1964), I tabulated 59 roll call votes: 30 in the Senate, 29 in the House.

I label every vote conservative or liberal, disregarding party affiliations or party stands. What do I mean by conservative and liberal?

The Founding Fathers who wrote our Constitution, and the men who ratified it, considered it a binding contract. It enumerates all powers which the federal government can legally exercise, sternly prohibiting that government from doing anything else.[1] The early American patriots who believed in such limited, constitutional government (or government by law, as John Adams phrased it) were known as liberals.

Today, liberal means the opposite: liberals, who share President Johnson's views, consider the Constitution a vague statement of general purpose, which leaves the federal government with unlimited power to do anything the President and a majority of Congress may wish, provided only that the Supreme Court does not disagree with the President and Congress.

Today, conservative (as I use the word) describes the political philosophy of the classic liberals who founded this nation. Conservatives consider the Constitution a binding contract which limits the federal government to clearly specified powers.

A conservative in Congress is one who considers himself bound, literally and completely, by the oath of office which he is required to take:

"I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic; that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the same; that I take this obligation freely, without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion; and that I will well and faithfully discharge the duties of the office on which I am about to enter: So help me God."[2]

A liberal who swears to "support and defend the Constitution" apparently considers the oath a quaint formality, because modern liberals scorn the idea that there are immutable principles of government, think it absurd to bind government today with the restrictions of an eighteenth-century Constitution.

Generally, the roll call votes which I tabulate reflect the modern liberal-versus-conservative attitude toward our Constitution, although the voting of individual members of Congress is not always guided by this fundamental cleavage in American political thought. Liberals who are obviously dedicated to total government occasionally vote with conservatives who believe in limited government; and vice versa.

I tabulate a few roll calls which clearly separate members of Congress into liberal and conservative positions, but which do not involve a constitutional issue. The Test Ban Treaty (ratified by the Senate September 24, 1963) is an example. The President had constitutional authority to negotiate the treaty. Conservatives who opposed the treaty agreed with Senator Barry Goldwater and with Dr. Edward Teller (father of the hydrogen bomb) who said:

"A test ban treaty with the Soviet Union would prevent vital improvements of our atomic explosives as well as foreclose the development of anti-missiles . . . . Such a treaty . . . would endanger our security and help the Soviet Union in its plan to conquer the world."[3]

Senators who cast liberal votes to ratify the Test Ban Treaty acknowledged the dangers, but said they supported administration efforts to relax international tensions and demonstrate America's desire for peace.[4]

Using these standards for labeling votes conservative or liberal, I have rated all members of the national Congress for their voting on important roll calls during 1963 and 1964.

THE TOP CANDIDATES

U. S. Representative William E. Miller (Republican Vice Presidential candidate) earned a conservative rating of 66% on roll calls tabulated during the present Congress. Senator Barry Goldwater shared with Senator Strom Thurmond the highest conservative rating (96%) in the Senate.

Senator Hubert H. Humphrey (Democrat Vice Presidential candidate) was a founder of the Americans for Democratic Action, a socialist organization which urges such policies as U. S. recognition of red China, more direct American aid to communist countries, abolition of the House Committee on Un-American Activities. Though Humphrey does not necessarily support all ADA policies, he has, nonetheless, openly identified himself with the ultra-liberalism of that organization.

President Johnson is widely considered a moderate, distinctly more conservative than Humphrey. Yet, Johnson is actually more liberal than Humphrey. Humphrey earned a conservative rating of 3% in 1963-64. Johnson was not a voting member of the 88th Congress; but the public stand he took (on issues that Humphrey, Goldwater, and Miller voted on) would have given Johnson a conservative rating of zero.

On September 10, 1964, President Johnson praised Eisenhower as a Republican who offered the people a change in party leadership, but not a change in policies. The President condemned Goldwater and his supporters as "reckless factions . . . [who] confront the American people and demand that you make a choice."[5]

Resenting the fact that Goldwater does offer voters a clear choice, Johnson tries to confuse the conservatism-versus-liberalism issue. His most notable efforts in this regard involve national defense. The President obviously has a team at work in the Pentagon preparing statements to check Senator Goldwater's every criticism of Johnson defense policies.[6] The President himself issues statements to allay public doubts. On September 17, for example, Johnson said at Sacramento that the United States has developed and installed two effective weapons systems to defend the nation against missiles.[7]

Pentagon spokesmen would make no comment; but the Secretary of Defense is on record with a statement which positively refutes the President.

On March 11, 1962, Defense Secretary Robert S. McNamara and other top Pentagon officials were quoted as saying the Soviets may be near a breakthrough in developing a defense against missiles, because the Soviets had been conducting massive nuclear tests in the air. Having conducted no tests since 1958, the United States had, according to Mr. McNamara, no "reasonable prospect" for a successful anti-missile defense. He and other top Pentagon officials were "taking a virtually hopeless attitude toward finding a defense against enemy missiles."(8)

It seems inconceivable that two effective anti-missiles systems, which President Johnson now says we have, could have been developed in two years — particularly since the nuclear testing which we did between March 11, 1962, and the signing of the Test Ban Treaty in July, 1963, was limited almost to insignificance.

WHAT TO DO

With President Johnson using the whole apparatus of the federal government to promote his candidacy, there is desperate need for all conservatives to work relentlessly during the next five weeks to spread the truth.

Distribute such information as is in this Report. Show that President Johnson uses his high office to confuse the issues and deceive the people. Explain what a Goldwater conservative is: one who honors, supports, and defends the Constitution. Call attention to the fact that liberals, though they pay lip service to the Constitution, scorn the basic principle of constitutional government — the principle that government must be bound by the constitutional contract.

For information about the capture of our society by totalitarian liberals, read The Invisible Government, published by The Dan Smoot Report. In pocketsize, the book costs $1.00 — as low as 20 cents each in quantities of 10,000 or more.
